Truman State University student donates bone marrow to save a baby boy's life!

Tori is a senior level nursing student at Truman State University who enjoys service and loving those around her. She joined the registry at the Spring 2014 drive and was contacted in the Fall of 2014 as a possible match for a baby boy with severe combined immunodeficiency syndrome.

Tori donated bone marrow in January 2015. Since the donation, Tori's life has changed. She desires to go into transplant nursing and to work with families experiencing the transplant process. Tori received an update about the baby boy in July 2015, the transplant worked! He is at home with his family and has returned to his pre-transplant activities. Tori is overjoyed and thankful the little boy is doing well, she would love to meet him someday.
