BECOME A TRUMAN FACEBOOK FAN

The University Facebook page can now be accessed directly from the Truman home page.

Originally created by the Admissions Office as a way for prospective and incoming students to learn about the University, the Facebook page has now grown to include current students, alumni and friends of Truman.

Among the features on the Truman Facebook page are links to other University pages, including the Student Activities Board, Bulldog Athletics, the Truman Media Network and the National Alumni Association. Fans can find valuable information about upcoming events, athletics updates, alumni gatherings and recent Truman news articles.

Currently the page has nearly 5,200 fans, but site administrators are hoping to have 6,000 fans by graduation.

The Truman Facebook page can be accessed at <http://www.facebook.com/trumanstateuniversity> or through the University homepage at <http://www.truman.edu>.

Schachner Receives Competitive Fellowship

Amy Schachner, a master of arts in education student from Hillsboro, Mo., has been selected for a Knowles Science Teaching Foundation Fellowship, created to support outstanding beginning teachers.

The KSTF is designed to cultivate and support exemplary science and mathematics high school teachers and develop the next generation of leaders in education. Specifically, the teaching fellowship aims to keep exceptional teachers in the profession by providing them with comprehensive professional development, mentoring and a community of peers.

Renewable for up to five years, the KSTF Fellowship provides tuition, monthly stipends and financial resources for the classroom, as well as travel and room and board expenses for three conferences a year.

"The fellowship is a great opportunity for me to continue on in professional development throughout my first five years of teaching," Schachner said. "My hope is that the support I receive in KSTF will allow me to devote the time and energy I need to teach my students and give them the best education possible."

Schachner is the first Truman student to receive this highly competitive fellowship. Her adviser, Susan LaGrassa, has been encouraging Truman students to apply for about three years, not only for financial reasons, but also for the opportunities it provides.

"The contacts she'll make will allow her to do anything she wants to in the field," LaGrassa said. "I suppose it is a little like winning the Tour de France. Not many people know about it, it is really hard to do, and when you do it, every door you could want to enter is opened for you."

Schachner submitted her initial application in January. A few weeks later the applicants were narrowed down and participated in a 45-minute phone interview. Schachner was among the approximately 70 finalists invited to an interview weekend in Philadelphia March 12-

13. She is one of only 11 mathematics fellowship recipients this year.

While Schachner has always enjoyed mathematics and teaching, she credits high school teacher Daniel Horridge with inspiring her.

"He was not only a great teacher who related the subject matter to his students well, but he also cared about us as unique individuals and gave us the respect we thought we deserved," she said.

Schachner plans to teach high school mathematics starting in the fall.

Amy Schachner accepts a resolution recognizing her achievement as a Knowles Science Teaching Foundation Fellowship recipient from Truman State University Board of Governors Chair Matthew Potter at the April 10 Board Meeting. Schachner is the first Truman student to receive the Fellowship.

Truman Blues Project Fuses Music With Academics

Clifton Kreps, chair of Classical and modern languages, always envisioned a class that merged academics with performance.

So when the opportunity for Innovative Academic Initiative Grants was publicized, Kreps jumped at the chance to establish The Truman Blues Project, a class with three components: academics; composition and performance; and civic engagement.

In November 2008, The Truman Blues Project was announced as a recipient of the Innovative Academic Initiative Grants. The criteria for selection of the proposals were that the initiative must be innovative and creative, develop critical thinking and problem solving skills, be able to be implemented in the 2009-10 school year and have learning objectives. Also it must incorporate two or more of the following: involve more than one academic discipline and have global or international relevance, community-based research, service-learning, connection between the curricular and the co-curricular or civic engagement.

"I was happy when they funded it, but on the other hand, it was the beginning of the real work," Kreps said. "I would say the implementation has been more difficult than even creating the proposal."

Kreps said implementation included deciding how to list the class, selecting an appropriate classroom and scheduling the best time. From there, he worked on the structure of the course and filling in the gaps of his blues knowledge.

The Truman Blues Project began with its first class this spring semester. Students in the class have various musical backgrounds and abilities.

Hank Eddins, a student in the class, has been playing music on his own for several years.

"With this class, you've got a hugely varied skill-set between each member," Eddins said. "The great thing about the blues, though, is its inherent simplicity. It creates a playing field where everyone can step in and play."

The grant has allowed students to hold a clinic with musicians such as local artists Peter Rolnick and members of Blue Voodoo. The group also conducted a class with musician Charlie Love from Chicago and attended one of his performances. Additionally, the group is traveling to a B. B. King performance in Columbia and taking in the Round Barn Blues Festival in Kirksville.

Alex McKamie, a student in the Truman Blues Project, said he enjoyed the Charlie Love class.

"It was great to talk to someone who had been living the blues for almost his entire life," McKamie said. "It was also great to see a group that had been playing with each other for so long that they made the blues look effortless."

The academic component of the class involves the early history of the blues, an area in which Kreps said students are not always familiar.

To tie the history into the coursework, students are working on research projects involving some aspect of the blues, and will be giving presentations during class. Some participated in the Student Research Conference.

Student research topics range from the importance of the fiddle in early blues music and its influence on great blues musicians, to the semiotics of guitar playing and poetry of Skip James.

Kreps said he hopes to be able to teach the course again and establish the Blues Project as a permanent organization to build upon each year.

Taste of Truman Offers College Experience to Wide Audience

The Truman Institute invites alumni who yearn to recapture a few days of the college experience, teachers in need of some classroom enrichment ideas, or members of the community seeking a sampling of the liberal arts experience that Truman is known for, to the first annual Taste of Truman, June 11-13.

The Taste of Truman is an opportunity for lifelong learners to attend short lectures by some of Truman's greatest professors.

All of the faculty who will teach in the Taste of Truman program have received, or been nominated for, one of the University's three top teaching or advising honors: the Allen Fellowship, the Teacher of the Year Award, or the Lee Advising Award.

Participants will choose from among two Extended Courses, which are classes that will meet for three hours each day June 11-12.

Additionally, participants will be able to select four Great Lectures from a set of eight classes to attend during the weekend.

Each Great Lecture lasts less than 90 minutes and focuses on a topic that is both near and dear to the professor lecturing but also of interest to a general audience.

Topics range from a sustainable environment, to dealing with health care providers, or exploring the joy and controversy of Christmas.

For $125, each Taste of Truman participant gets access to one Extended Course and four Great Lectures. They also get two continental breakfasts, two lunches and a graduation brunch.

Participants wanting to recapture some of the college experience can stay in Truman's West Campus Suites for $34 per night (single occupancy) or $26 per night (double occupancy).

Due to the cost of meals and supplies, faculty and staff interested in attending all weekend events will also be charged $125.

Those wishing to sit-in on individual lectures can do so on a space-available basis by contacting the Truman Institute Office at 785.5384.

For more information or to register for Taste of Truman, visit <http://institute.truman.edu/taste.asp>.

NOTABLES

Dereck Daschke, chair and associate professor of philosophy and religion, had his book, "City of Ruins: Mourning Jerusalem through Jewish Apocalypse," published this month by Brill. The book is based on his 2000 Ph.D. dissertation at the University of Chicago Divinity School and is a reading of Jewish apocalyptic texts through the Freudian theory of mourning and melancholia.

Regina Loehr, a senior classics student, won first prize in Latin Prose Composition and third prize in Advanced Greek Translation in the Maurine Dallas Watkins Contests, a national Classics competition. These results were announced April 10 at the annual Eta Sigma Phi Convention in Blacksburg, Va. Eta Sigma Phi is a National Classics Honor Society. Loehr also won second prize in Intermediate Latin Translation in the same competition in 2008. David Giovagnoli, a sophomore classics and English student, was elected president, or megas prytanis, of Eta Sigma Phi. His one-year term began immediately; he will be required to represent Eta Sigma Phi at various Classics conferences throughout the year.

Elaine McDuff, associate professor of sociology, organized and served as convener for one session and as discussant for another session at the Midwest Sociological Society meeting March 30-April 3 in Chicago. The sessions were titled "Women and Religion" and "Classroom Exercises and the Development of Critical Thinking." Sociology majors participating in the meeting included Chermaine Jennings, Kathrine Olsen-Flaate, Zakery Palmer, Brandon Pollard and Anubia Stephens.

Sara E. Orel, professor of art history, will be the Truman faculty member teaching in the Missouri in London Program in the fall of 2010. While in London, she will be presenting her research on the site of the Gebel el-Haridi at the Third British Egyptology Conference and giving invited lectures at the University of Bristol and to several local Egyptological organizations.

Lynn Rose, professor of history, has received a Fulbright Senior Lecturer Fellowship at the University of Rostock, Germany, for the 2010-2011 academic year. This is a joint invitation from The Institute of British and American Studies and the Department of Special Education. Rose will teach disability studies courses at all levels, from introductory to graduate, and will work with German and European Union scholars of disability studies, as well as visiting scholars from the U.S. and Canada, to offer workshops and seminars. Steven Reschly, professor and chair of history, will undertake work on his sabbatical projects while affiliated with the University of Rostock.

Kelsey Shields, junior music major, is a winner in the 2010 International Trumpet Guild Scholarship contest. This competition includes trumpet players from all over the world who send in a recording of a required solo with piano accompaniment and a very challenging technical etude. Shields will be honored at the 2010 ITG Conference in Sydney, Australia, where she will also perform alongside professional trumpet players and university professors from dozens of countries.

French students Jessica Rideout, Catherine Bauer, Misty Lipp and Hannah Wetzel gave the first oral paper session entirely in French at the Student Research Conference at Truman April 13. Their studies were on the work of French/Francophone Women historical figures and writers: Holocaust (Shoah) Autobiographer Charlotte Delbo; French Caribbean writer Maryse Condé; Québécois novelist Gabrielle Roy; and French medievalist author Marie de France.

Junior computer science majors Michael Price, Michael Rodriguez, Michael Solomon and coach Bob Matthews, assistant professor of computer science, traveled to the CCSC Regional Programming Contest at Park University in Parkville, Mo., April 12. The students successfully solved three out of six programming problems (tying with the first and second place teams in the number of problems solved), and were awarded third place out of 17 teams. The students each received a prize of $30.

STUDENTS TO SHAVE HEADS FOR CANCER RESEARCH

Alpha Phi Omega is hosting a head shaving event for St. Baldrick's Foundation at 11 a.m. May 1 in the Student Union Building Georgian Rooms.

Sixteen students have vowed to shave their heads in solidarity with children who lose their hair due to childhood cancers.

St. Baldrick's Foundation now funds more in childhood cancer research grants than any organization except the U.S. government.

More than 130,000 volunteers have shaved their heads in solidarity of children with cancer, while requesting donations of support from friends and family.

So far, the shavers have raised more than $5,500 toward their $5,000 goal. One Truman student alone has raised more than $2,000 for the St. Baldrick's Foundation this year.

Those interested in shaving their head in support of St. Baldrick's Foundation can either register online at <http://www.stbaldricks.org> or the during the event.

Time to write a bibliography?

There are several online resources that can help. One is EndNote, a program that downloads to a computer, which allows users to download citations and it will format them in the selected citation style. Zotero is a similar product but it only works on the Firefox browser. For examples of how to format bibliographic citations in the three major styles, MLA, APA and Turabian, see the following webpage: <http://library.truman.edu/weblinks/citing-sources.asp>.
